PUBLICATIONS

Articles

- Citizenism: Racialized Discrimination by Design, 104 B.U. L. REV. (forthcoming April 2024). This Article – one of the first in legal discourse advances the conceptual framework of “citizenism” to describe how citizenship is mobilized to sustain structural racism. Citizenism functions as a legalized system of discrimination that uses citizenship status to perpetuate racialized outcomes for communities of color. Specifically, law and immigration enforcement make legally permissible presumptions about citizenship based on race, which delimits the fundamental rights of citizens of color. A focus on citizenism provides a new framework for understanding an underlying layer of white supremacy that defines access to and shapes the civil and political rights of people of color.
- The Disposable “Essential” Workers of COVID-19, 66:1 BOSTON COLL. L. REV. (forthcoming January 2025). This Article identifies factors that explain the discordant treatment and conditions of low-wage workers of color in the United States throughout and after the COVID-19 pandemic.

Discussing how COVID-19 intensified existing racial, gender, and economic inequalities in employment, this Article explores the lasting health and economic effects that negatively impact low-wage workers in essential industries. This Article also offers policy and legislative interventions to narrow the structured inequality in employment that the global pandemic has magnified.

- Misregulating Borders and Gendering Bodies (work in progress). This Article argues that asylum and employment anti-discrimination laws operate under a gender binary, contributing to the suppression of gender-expansive and non-conforming people. This Article investigates how gender and LGBTQIA+ migrants access and navigate gender-based asylum and employment discrimination claims. This Article also proposes that such administrative and legal processes adopt an intersectional framework to provide adequate remedies to the multiple vulnerabilities that undocumented transgender Latinas experience when seeking asylum relief and discrimination suits.
- Generational Illegality (work in progress). This Article explores how illegality and race perpetuate cycles of trauma, poverty, and inequality within Latinx and immigrant families of color. Limited access to resources, economic opportunities, and systemic racism embedded in immigration policies contribute to ongoing socioeconomic inequalities that dispel the notion of the “American Dream” in migration. Challenging the historical and contemporary lack of incorporation of specific illegalized communities of color that continue to experience displacement, deportability, persecution, loss of generational wealth, and complex trauma, this Article builds on the concept of citizenism to investigate the lasting effects of racialized inequalities upon illegalized communities.
- (E)racing the Vote: Race, “Illegality,” and the Myth of Voter Fraud (work in progress). The political rights of U.S. citizens of color have been threatened since the 2016 election, premised on claims of non-citizen voter fraud. Considering the staggering legislation introduced across the country since then, this Article analyses recent Supreme Court opinions surrounding the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and codes state-by-state legislative efforts claiming to tackle voter fraud. Building on my concept of citizenism, this Article discusses how race and immigration status inform these legislative efforts, focusing on the potential voter suppression of Black voters premised on the racialized construction of Latinxs as “illegal” voters.

Policy Pieces

- Advancing a Living Wage and Human Rights for Restaurant Workers in the United States, 2016 CLEARINGHOUSE REV. 1 (2016) (with Saru Jayaraman). This advocacy piece makes a case for eliminating the subminimum wage to close the gender and racial pay gaps and help alleviate wage inequities in low-wage-tipped sectors of the economy.
- Working Below the Line: How the Subminimum Wage for Tipped Workers Violates International Human Rights Standards (Laurel Fletcher, et al., eds., 2015) (with Suzanne Dershowitz & Kathleen Tang). This policy report analyzes international human rights standards concerning the subminimum-wage-tipped structure in the United States. This report investigates federal and state laws that maintain this wage structure and enable restaurant-industry employment wages that violate fundamental human rights protections for tipped workers. Furthermore, this analysis indicates significant human rights deprivations and the need for new laws and policies.
