Articles

Multigenerational Illegality: Transforming Indigenous Peoples to “Illegal” Beings, 16 UC IRVINE LAW REVIEW ____ (forthcoming 2026). This Article incorporates the concept of multigenerational illegality into the broader citizenship framework. Rooted in citizenship, this concept explains how immigration laws and enforcement policies harm mixed-status Indigenous families and Latinx/e families. By blending conceptual analysis with personal narratives, this Article makes three key contributions to the literature. First, it defines multigenerational illegality, examining how these families are branded as “illegal” and systematically denied opportunities to obtain immigration status or U.S. citizenship, leading to marginalization across generations. Second, it highlights the legal harms experienced by mixed-status Indigenous families and Latinx/e undocumented families through this system over time and space. Third, it introduces the concept of sacrificios [sacrifices], the often-invisible acts of survival that shape families as they resist and endure this system of subordination.

The Disposable “Essential” Workers of COVID-19, 66:1 BOSTON COLLEGE LAW REVIEW 69 (2025). This Article examines how race, gender, and citizenship affect the employment and life outcomes of essential workers who supported the economy during the COVID-19 pandemic. Using a health justice approach, it fills a gap in legal scholarship by identifying six employment-related factors that worsen systemic inequalities. By examining COVID-19-related wrongful deaths and discrimination lawsuits involving low-wage workers, the Article assesses how effective legal remedies are. Despite immense human loss, there are clear lessons for labor and employment systems reform to protect, rather than discard, essential workers facing intensified and complex disadvantages. Therefore, this Article recommends adopting employment equity principles to address intersectional disparities in employment.

Citizenship: Racialized Discrimination by Design, 104 BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW REVIEW 831 (2024); reprinted in 45 KING HALL’S IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY LAW REVIEW (2025). This Article—one of the first in legal discourse—advances the conceptual framework of “citizenship” to explain how citizenship mobilizes and maintains structural racism. Citizenship functions as a legalized system of discrimination that uses citizenship status to perpetuate racialized outcomes for communities of color. Specifically, law and immigration enforcement make legally permissible presumptions about citizenship based on race, which delimit the fundamental rights of citizens of color. Citizenship provides a new framework for understanding an underlying layer of white supremacy that restricts the civil and political rights of people of color, including citizens of color.

Chapters & Essays

Misregulating Borders and Gendering Bodies: TransLatinxs Asylum Seekers, in HANDBOOK ON THE POLITICS OF ASYLUM (DeGruyter-Brill ed., forthcoming 2027). This chapter examines the various ways gender and economic refugees—TransLatinxs—migrate from Latin America. It also looks at how gender and LGBTQIA+ migrants access and navigate gender-based asylum claims. The chapter then proposes that these processes adopt an intersectional framework to effectively address the multiple vulnerabilities undocumented TransLatinxs face.

WORKS IN PROGRESS

Blood, Soil, and Race: The Perils of Shredding the Fourteenth Amendment. The constitutional battle of our generation centers on protecting the integrity of the Fourteenth Amendment, which overruled Dred Scott v. Sandford. The Supreme Court consolidated numerous lawsuits under Trump v. Barbara for merits review. Across the country, these suits challenge the constitutionality of Executive Order 14160, which seeks to eliminate jus soli (birthright) citizenship by descent. If enacted, this Order will revive mechanisms of the pre-Reconstruction Constitution that echo the denial of U.S. citizenship to Brown people and Black people. This Essay outlines how congressional or administrative efforts to re-whiten birthright citizenship, like Executive Order 14160, will specifically harm children of color. Almost all these children belong to this country's caste of undocumented, impoverished, and disenfranchised families. Specifically, this Essay highlights the multigenerational harms to mixed-status families of color, including facilitating economic exploitation, magnifying health disparities, and creating the risk of statelessness. These harms highlight how efforts to shred the Fourteenth Amendment test the durability of citizenship as a foundational guarantee of racial equality and democratic belonging.

Citizenism 2.0: The Remaking of a White Citizen Nation. The Trump Administration's white nationalist agenda demonstrates how citizenism controls rights and belonging based on race, class, and citizenship. A clear example is Executive Order 14160, which seeks to deny birthright citizenship to children of undocumented parents and those with temporary statuses. The constitutionality of this Executive Order will directly impact Latinx/e communities and children of color, who could become indefinitely stateless. Therefore, this Article argues that Executive Order 14160 is a white supremacist tool meant to keep a racially subordinate, non-citizen population. To support this, it presents racialized case studies from Japan and the Dominican Republic, which deny birthright citizenship to Korean and Haitian immigrants, respectively. The U.S. could follow these examples if this Executive Order is found constitutional. Instead, this Article recommends pathways to racial belonging through protecting birthright citizenship, which should serve as a foundation for extending citizenship to the parents of all children born in the United States.

Unearthing Milagros [Miracles]: Rooted Visions of Liberation (with Cinthia A. Ibarra and Bamby Salcedo). The co-authors apply a Participatory Law Scholarship (PLS) approach to rethink migration and gender systems. Specifically, this Article explores how citizenism poses challenges for intersectional undocumented communities, drawing on the lived experiences of movement activists dedicated to confronting legal dysfunction. It enhances PLS by emphasizing the expertise of undocumented, Mexican, transgender, and Indigenous women who have been harmed by patriarchy and the immigration law enforcement system. Notably, the co-authors ground their contributions on expansive possibilities for justice across space, time, genders, and

POLICY PIECES

Advancing a Living Wage and Human Rights for Restaurant Workers in the United States, in CLEARINGHOUSE REVIEW 1 (2016) (with Saru Jayaraman). This advocacy piece presents a case for eliminating the subminimum wage to close the gender and racial pay gaps and help alleviate wage inequities in low-wage and tipped sectors of the economy.

Working Below the Line: How the Subminimum Wage for Tipped Workers Violates International Human Rights Standards, (2015) (Laurel Fletcher, et al., eds., with Suzanne Dershowitz & Kathleen Tang). This policy report examines international human rights standards related to the subminimum wage tipped structure in the United States. This report discusses federal and state laws that maintain this wage structure and enable wages in the restaurant industry that violate fundamental human rights protections for tipped workers. Furthermore, this analysis indicates significant human rights deprivations and the need for new laws and policies.
